Founder & Executive Director, Bridget's Dream

Leah Albright-Byrd is a known leader, speaker, and survivor-activist in the fight against human trafficking. Her strong voice and unwavering commitment to “help victims become survivors and learn to dream again” inspires people to wage war against social injustice. Coming from a family life marked by abuse and addiction, dropping out of high school at the age of 14, and becoming a victim of sexual exploitation were obstacles that did not prevent her from becoming the vibrant woman she is today. At the age of 18 she refused to allow her pain determine her destiny, completed her GED, and began attending Sacramento City College. She eventually transferred to William Jessup University where she earned a B.S. in Psychology and Theology. And went on to receive her Coaching certification from Western Seminary.

Since 2002, Leah has served her community as a mental health counselor, youth advocate, and motivational speaker. Leah's love for seeing people's lives transformed led to the development of Bridget's Dream, an organization founded in 2011 to fight sex-trafficking in memory of a close friend of hers who was murdered in Las Vegas and was also a victim of child sex-trafficking. In 2012, she co-signed and served as a highly influential political advocate for a California record-breaking proposition (Prop 35) to increase the penalties against human- traffickers. Angela was born and raised in the Philippines. Both of her parents worked hard to support the family but life was still difficult. Angela earned a scholarship to attend a 2 year college. Despite this, opportunities were limited. Her father fell ill and Angela needed a way to help the family with the cost of medical treatment. Angela was recruited to work in California for what she thought would be a great job. When she arrived in the US, her trafficker told her that she owed $12,000.00, and that she would have to work for 10 years in order to pay her debt. Angela worked 18 hours a day caring for elderly residents, slept on hallway floors and ate table scraps, all for $300 a month. She and her co-workers were threatened that if they tried to escape, her trafficker would get them deported by calling the police and telling them that they stole something from her.

When a neighbor noticed that neither she nor her co-worker ever had a day off, he notified the FBI. Angela worked with the FBI to free her co-worker and herself, gathering evidence to help the prosecution. Her trafficker pled guilty and received a 5 year prison sentence. Angela became a CAST client and stayed at the CAST shelter for 18 months. While at the shelter, she received intensive case management and legal services, which helped her get stabilized and allowed her the space to heal. She also learned English and went back to school.

She spearheaded the first ever district-wide strategic planning effort, called the Sunset District Blueprint, to identify short-term and long-term initiatives to improve the neighborhood; introduced legislation unanimously adopted by the Board of Supervisors to provide our city with additional enforcement tools over massage establishments serving as potential fronts for human trafficking; launched the city's first Front Yard Ambassador Program to assist residents with front yard landscaping installations and to divert 30,000 gallons of rainwater from the city's sewer system in the first phase of the program; and initiated efforts with the Planning Department to identify land use opportunity sites with the Sunset District to address the city's housing challenges.

Katy is a member of the San Francisco Collaborative Against Human Trafficking, where she works with city agencies and partners to end human trafficking through education, outreach, advocacy, and supporting human trafficking survivors.

She also works closely with the Ocean Beach Master Plan steering committee, where she has been engaging with city agencies and partners to implement recommendations for a more sustainable future on San Francisco's Pacific Coast. Katy previously served as Supervisor Carmen Chu's Legislative Aide for over five years, drafting legislation to create neighborhood commercial districts for District Four business corridors, increasing protections for victims of domestic violence, streamlining complex City contracting processes, facilitating prompt payment to City contractors, and instituting increased penalties for crimes committed in and around public transit.

As Legislative Aide, Katy served as an adviser on policy issues before the Board of Supervisors, analyzed legislation, served as lead staff in developing the City's first two-year budget that balanced a $6.8 billion annual City budget and closed budget shortfalls of $380 million, and worked with District Four neighbors and businesses to implement community improvement projects, including the completion of a pilot Storefront Improvement Project on Noriega and Taraval streets that improved 15 neighborhood businesses and created a model for small businesses citywide. Katy also spearheaded efforts to assist small businesses in complying with the Americans with Disabilities Act requirements, helping to create access for all San Franciscans while also protecting businesses.

Katy also served in Mayor Gavin Newsom's administration in the Office of Public Policy & Finance where she led neighborhood involvement efforts in the development of the City's first Community Justice Center, in addition to her work assisting with development of the City's budget.

Keeping San Francisco family-friendly, improving Muni service, encouraging economic development, enhancing pedestrian and public safety, and ensuring fiscal accountability are among her top priorities. Katy grew up in the Outer Sunset District and attended neighborhood grammar, middle and high schools.
